Lionel Barber recommends

01 Brussels probes multinationals' tax deals

Jamie Smyth's story on the Commission's probe into tax deals in Ireland, was widely followed - and provoked a slew of political interventions in Ireland.

02 Syria crisis: A long week – Putin's diplomatic gambit

James Blitz wrote a fascinating Saturday Big Page on the topsy-turvy week of diplomacy.

03 Russia's Vladimir Putin plays to strengths on foreign policy

Charles Clover offered insights into the watery-eyed statesman Vladimir Putin.

04 Opinion: Insane financial system lives post-Lehman

Gillian Tett wrote an all-you-need to know column about the (slightly scary) world after Lehman.

05 Opinion: America's economic growth is built on sand

Robin Harding wrote an elegant and persuasive opinion editorial arguing that the US recovery is built on sand.

06 Opinion: Germany is a vegetarian in a world full of carnivores

Gideon Rachman wrote about the vegetarian nature of modern Germany in a world of carnivores.

07 London's tunnellers struggle to stay on straight and narrow

James Pickford wrote a fascinating account of tunneling beneath London as Crossrail -- Europe's biggest engineering project -- worms its way under the capital.

UK Royal Mail privatisation has been on the cards for 20 years

08

Brian Groom got an early steal on the Royal Mail privatisation and explained how Vince Cable is set to succeed where Mandelson and Heseltine failed.

09

Mining: Hazards of the frontier

Andrew England wrote a superb big page on the hazards of frontier mining in Africa, a must read for investors and CEOs.

10

Opinion: Coming soon – an Apple product that you can eat

Richard Waters' Saturday opinion editorial on the future Apple world was inspiring and slightly scary.
